WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT JUUL, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

There are a lot of reasons to love the weekend (more on that in tomorrow's issue), but one of the major highlights has to be brunch. For foodies, going to your favorite spot to enjoy a late-morning, early-afternoon meal is a beloved weekend tradition. However, if you need to get your brunch fix during the workweek grind, you're in luck. We've put together a comprehensive guide to all the great spots serving up brunch every day of the week.

Sanders once again makes a run for president

1 U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders, the Vermont progressive whose 2016 White House campaign garnered fervent grassroots support and pushed the Democratic Party sharply to the left, said on Tuesday he would again seek the party's presidential nomination in 2020. Sanders, 77, announced his candidacy in an email to supporters, vowing to build a vast movement to confront the special interests that he said dominate government and politics. Sanders said he would push for many of the same issues that powered his 2016 run and resonated with younger voters, including universal health care, raising the hourly minimum wage to $15, and free public college tuition. "Our campaign is about creating a government and economy that works for the many, not just the few," Sanders said, asking for 1 million people to sign up to kick off his bid.

Trump signs directive in move to create Space Force

2 President Donald Trump on Tuesday took a step needed for lawmakers to begin the lengthy process of creating a U.S. Space Force, a new branch of the military dedicated to handling threats in space. Trump signed Space Policy Directive 4, which puts in place the foundation for a legislative initiative that could establish a Space Force as a new military service comparable to the U.S. Marines. In an Oval Office signing ceremony, Trump said the Space Force is a national security priority. The memo directs the Department of Defense "to marshal its space resources to deter and counter threats in space," through the establishment of Space Force that would be part of the Air Force, according to a draft seen by Reuters. Establishing the Space Force will require congressional approval.

Stone ordered to appear in court over Instagram posts

4 Roger Stone, a former political adviser to President Donald Trump, was ordered on Tuesday to appear in court this week over Instagram posts that chastised and appeared to threaten the judge presiding over his criminal trial. U.S. District Judge Amy Berman Jackson said Stone would need to show cause at a hearing on Thursday as to why the posts did not violate a gag order in the case or the conditions of his release. Stone, who is free on a $250,000 bond and is free to travel to certain U.S. cities without the court's permission, has pleaded not guilty to charges of making false statements to Congress, obstruction and witness tampering as part of Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation of Russian meddling in the 2016 election. Stone's attorneys filed a formal apology with the court on Monday, after he posted a photograph on Instagram of Jackson apparently in the crosshairs of a gun.

Meghan Markle in NYC for baby shower: Report

5 Meghan Markle, who is expecting her first child with Britain's Prince Harry in the spring, was in New York City for a baby shower on Tuesday, according to Harper's Bazaar magazine, which cited unnamed sources. It was the first trip back to the United States by the American former actress since her marriage to Harry at a celebrity-filled ceremony at Windsor Castle last May. Kensington Palace declined to comment on the reports that Markle, 37, was attending the gift-giving party to celebrate her baby's upcoming arrival. She was seen stepping out of a luxury hotel on Manhattan's Upper East Side on Tuesday afternoon. Markle, who holds the royal title of the Duchess of Sussex, arrived on Friday, Harper's reported, and was due to be guest of honor at the shower at her hotel.

ICE detainees go on hunger strike

About 70 at the SCHC are protesting abusive housing conditions.

NATE HOMAN
letters@metro.us

Dozens of detainees housed by federal immigration officials in the Suffolk County House of Correction are on hunger strike, according to several local activist groups. According to the FANG Collective and Alianza para Movilizar Nuestra Resistencia, "detainees at the Suffolk County House of Correction launched a hunger strike calling for an end to abusive treatment and for more humane conditions," which began on Friday.

The activist groups claim that "correction officers are actively retaliating against them by searching cells and destroying belongings. We were also informed that a lieutenant made a threat to place more detainees in isolation if they do not break the strike."

In their letter of grievances, detainees described semi-functional sinks without hot water, bad food, restricted access to bathrooms for over 70 people and abusive treatment from officials.

"Detainees are refusing institutional meals, but have continued to eat their canteen food and drink liquids."

Suffolk County Sheriff's Department

"There is no official hunger strike in effect," a rep for the Suffolk County Sheriff's Department told WBUR in a statement. "Detainees are refusing institutional meals, but have continued to eat their canteen food and drink liquids. We are monitoring the situation with the proper medical supervision and will respond appropriately."

"[Suffolk County officials] have not given us any response outside of a brief statement," FANG Collective member Arely Diaz said. "People are protesting the fact that people are being detained for as long as they have, and that four people are being held in solitary as retaliatory measures with the threat of more."

The activist groups are also questioning Suffolk County House of Correction's authority to detain people on behalf of ICE, and seek clarification on how long they can hold detainees.

"As we understand it, the maximum amount of time they're allowed to detain people is 24 hours, but people have reported being held for weeks," Diaz said. "Whenever we [would] request grievance forms, the C.O.s would tell us it wouldn't matter because it would just go in the trash."

The future of meat is in the lab

Lab-grown meat is not something out of this world. There are already nuggets and hamburgers created in a way that does not harm animals and the environment. But when will such products appear on our plates? Metro investigates.

DANIEL CASILLAS

ISTOCK

Human consumption of meat has been criticized by environmentalists who say livestock farming contributes to the generation of greenhouse gases, as well as by animal-protection organizations that oppose violent ways animals are treated and killed.

Despite this, the meat industry has been growing and is expected to continue to do so in the future. The most recent data published by the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) revealed that the average amount of meat consumed per person globally has nearly doubled in the past 50 years, from around 24.2kg in 1964 to 41.3kg in 2015, and is expected to reach 45.3kg by 2030.

According to experts, levels of meat production will become unsustainable in a few years.

"At current rates, production of meat and seafood around the world will double to 544 billion kg by 2050. Our planet can't afford to supply the water, fuel, pesticides and fertilizer that industrialized animal production requires," Andrew Noyes, head of communications at JUST, a company that creates chicken meat and nuggets from feathers, explained to Metro.

Animal abuse is another important issue. According to FAO, worldwide more than 70 billion animals are killed for food every year. People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) states that most of these animals die in terrible conditions.

That is why alternatives are already being created within the meat industry. Some companies decided to create products in the laboratory to tackle those problems and cover at least part of the demand. Memphis Meat from the U.S. has become a pioneer by creating a beef hamburger in a lab in 2016.

"We want to provide a new production method for a familiar product that can, alongside existing production methods, help meet demand and feed the world in a sustainable manner," David Kay, communications and sustainability manager at Memphis Meat, said.

Another innovative process is used by JUST. This American company produces chicken meat from feathers of the bird or with help from a small biopsy — without a need to kill. After obtaining the cell lines, they use plants to provide nutrients and make them grow. With this procedure, JUST seeks to make meat production more efficient and reduce contamination and mistreatment to zero.

Both companies highlight that producing meat this way is more sustainable, reduces livestock space, improves animal welfare and even has health benefits (by reducing the risk of diseases caused by consumption). However, there are still many challenges for such products to reach our tables.

Despite the positive impact of lab-grown meat, some livestock sectors such as the United States Cattlemen's Association are asking authorities to be wary of the trade name that will be given to such products.

Authorities such as the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) have started to organize public meetings regarding foods produced using animal cell culture technology to learn more about the issue and be prepared for the time when those products are ready to go to market.

Try the duck hash at Brownstone. PROVIDED

Who doesn't love pancakes?

Where to eat brunch in Boston any day of the week

In a culinary landscape where dress codes have gone extinct and nearly anything can be ordered and delivered via phone, the relegation of brunch to Saturdays and Sundays seems to be one of the last rules left standing. But even that may be changing, with these five local spots blazing the trail to weekday brunch.

Sonsie
This Newbury Street mainstay is the latest entrant in the weekday brunch club, having extended its service to seven days a week earlier this month. Turns out huevos rancheros nachos and corned beef and sweet potato hash are just as enticing on Mondays, too. 327 Newbury St., sonsieboston.com

Lincoln Tavern & Restaurant
From Monday to Thursday, Lincoln serves a slightly truncated version of its weekend brunch menu, which still covers comfort heavy-hitters like wood-fired breakfast pizza and Fruity Pebbles pancakes. Things get freakier each Friday, where the normal lunch menu is supplemented by ever-changing "brunch test kitchen" specials that have included the likes of hot chocolate French toast and lasagna pizza. 425 W. Broadway, South Boston, lincolnsouthboston.com

Brownstone
Brownstone's weekday brunch splits things squarely down the middle, dividing into "a little lunch" and "a little brunch" sections. The latter's offerings, from buttermilk pancakes to duck hash to a purportedly hangover-curing aglio e olio, are best saved for afternoons with little to nothing on the work calendar. 111 Dartmouth St., brownstoneboston.com

Deep Ellum
Deep Ellum may be best known for its classic cocktails and craft beer selections, but a Monday-to-Friday brunch provides good reason to frequent it in the daytime, too. Reasons like Monte Cristo sandwiches with house-cured ham, challah French toast and a "bbq breakfast" with braised pork, cornbread, a fried egg and mustard aioli. 477 Cambridge St., Allston, deepellum-allston.com/dewp

Mamaleh's
It may not be labeled "brunch," but the breakfast menu at this modern Jewish deli extends to 4 p.m. each weekday. That's a whole lot of time to get your hands on noodle kugel, pastrami-egg-and-cheese sandwiches and house-cured lox. 15 Hampshire St., Cambridge, mamalehs.com ERIC TWARDZIK

Necar Zadegan steals the show in 'Documentary Now!'

The "NCIS: New Orleans" star talks parodying the popular Netflix docuseries "Wild Wild Country."

drew.husband@metro.us

Soon after the documentary series "Wild Wild Country" premiered on Netflix last year, audiences found themselves captivated once again by Ma Anand Sheela, the former spokeswoman for the Rajneesh movement. Perhaps this is why, despite the presence of actors like Michael Keaton and Owen Wilson, the real star of the two-part "Documentary Now!" season 3 premiere, which airs Wednesday night, is Necar Zadegan.

Best known for her work in television shows like "NCIS: New Orleans" and "Girlfriends' Guide to Divorce," the actress plays Ra-Sharir, a character she describes as "a louder version" of Sheela as "Wild Wild Country" depicts her. Metro spoke to Zadegan about the character ahead of the season 3 premiere, which executive producer and writer Seth Meyers, who's also the host of "Late Night" on NBC, titled "Batsh*t Valley."

"I had seen the documentary before getting involved, and Ra-Sharir for sure is probably the most closely related to the actual person who inspired her," she explains. "She's an interesting character and, of course, she's even a louder version of Sheela in 'Wild Wild Country.' Everything is more heightened. In that sense, she's even a bit more glamorous than her counterpart… especially when you consider the things Seth did to distance Ra-Sharir from Sheela."

Necar Zadegan plays Ra-Sharir in "Documentary Now!" season 3. "Documentary Now!" returns for a new season tonight. RHYS THOMAS/IFC

That Meyers and the "Documentary Now!" team go to great lengths to heighten, or exaggerate, the subjects they lampoon makes sense. This is a comedy series, after all, and comedy that means to satirize something lives, breathes and dies by exaggeration.

When done right, like in "Batsh*t Valley," this kind of comedy can even be used to heighten serious matters in an otherwise humorous setting. The two-part premiere does this so well with the character of Ra-Sharir and it's worth going into Wednesday's episodes without being spoiled. So relax, because there are no spoilers here, but that didn't stop Zadegan from gushing about the experience.

"Oh my god, it's so hilarious what Seth and those guys have done," she exclaims. "And it's weird how relevant it is. Think about our current politics and how all these discussions are happening about how so many people were duped. Ra-Sharir is sort of a spoof of that discussion, especially since she's such a duper herself. I mean, it's obviously terrible, but the character is so exaggerated that it's comedic."

"Documentary Now!" season 3 premiere airs tonight at 11 p.m. on IFC.

Past mistake makes Sale deal vital for Sox

The cautionary tale of Jon Lester makes securing Chris Sale a must for the Red Sox.

JULIAN EDLOW
sports@metro.us

Red Sox ace pitcher Chris Sale. GETTY IMAGES

The Red Sox have a lot of uncertainty surrounding their upcoming free agents. The club's going to have to make some tough decisions as to which young pieces are worth investing in and which ones are worth moving on from.

There's not as much uncertainty when it comes to Chris Sale. The left-handed ace is in the final year of his five-year, $32.5 million contract (an absolute steal), which is set to pay him $15 million this season (still a steal).

Sale's been crystal clear with his preference — he wants to remain a member of the Boston Red Sox.

The team has been crystal clear — it wants the man that was on the mound to clinch the 2018 World Series back for 2020 and beyond.

So, shouldn't this be easy?

Well, we all remember how this same situation went with Jon Lester after winning the 2013 World Series entering a contract year. The Red Sox offered an underwhelming four-year, $70 million extension to him during spring training in 2014. After declining, Boston was forced to trade Lester to the Oakland A's as a rental piece at the trade deadline. Lester then agreed to a six-year, $155 million deal with the Cubs prior to the 2015 season, leaving Boston's offer looking laughable, while Lester went on to reverse another curse in Chicago.

Now that the Red Sox have won some hardware of their own since blowing the Lester negotiations, owner John Henry said as much in his own words to the media down in Florida.

"I think we blew the Jon Lester [negotiations] … we blew that signing in spring training," Henry told reporters at a media session that also touched on his presence to sign Sale.

What does this all have to do with Sale?

The Red Sox know they can't blow this one. Combine that with Sale's preference to remain in Boston, and this gives Henry, and the rest of ownership, a second chance to make right on how they wronged Lester.

Three of the four highest-paid players in baseball from the 2018 season were starting pitchers and will be the comparisons when drawing up a deal for Sale. Behind Clayton Kershaw and Zack Greinke, and making things more complicated, is David Price, who just opted into the remainder of his seven-year, $217 million deal.

Paying Price and Sale could handcuff Boston in its ability to also re-sign some of the younger position players when the time comes. But the team, through Henry, has admitted to learning from its previous mistake. Signing Sale to a fair extension early could be the best way to budget the payroll long-term, seeing as the alternatives with Lester would've been giving in too late for full market value, or losing him.

Given the mutual interest in agreeing to a long-term deal, look for the Red Sox to try and get an extension done with Sale sooner rather than later. For now, Sox fans should feel confident that they'll see Sale in their uniform for years to come. If that's not the case by the time Opening Day rolls around, then maybe the Red Sox weren't exactly being honest about learning their lesson.
